IELPLINES by Claire Henderson

0898 helplines claim to tell the truth about drugs, and state that they give information on the history, and long and short term effects. But are they worth the money? At 36p cheap rate, and 48p standard rate, with most of them lasting 5-7 minutes, it may be advisable to phone a local or national centre. Some phonelines are informative, but the problem with most of them is that they do not state how long they go on for. If helplines are making an average of £2.50 per phone call (cheap rate) it's easy to understand why there are loads of them about.

If you do want to ask questions about drugs or seek legal advice the best place to phone is Release, the national drugs and legal helpline. The staff include lawyers and nursing staff, plus volunteers with some knowledge of drug use, who are there to help you. They are completely clued up, not just about drugs, but also about the whole ravescene.

I asked one of the staff about Release -

CH: How long has Release been going?

RE: 25 years

CH: What work do you do, is it mostly counselling or legal?

RE: About 50/50. We can put callers onto sympathetic solicitors, and we are in touch with the Crown Prosecution Service about giving cautions to first time offenders for cannabis possession

CH: How dangerous do you think Ecstasy is?

RE: For the majority of people, depending on how they use it, it is no a problem

CH: Do you get many people calling you up about Ecstasy?

RE: It goes in spates. We get peaks, it fluctuates. After a story on Ecstasy (eg. In the Sun) we get a lot of calls. We get users calling up about a complete cross section of drugs. Cannabis is a big one.

CH: What do you know about the use of Strychnine in drugs?

RE: Its use is a bit of a legend. Problems thought to be caused by Strychnine can usually be accounted for by something else. Release publish informative leaflets on a range of subjects such as crack, hallucinogenic mushrooms, drugs and the law, ecstasy, amylnitrate, LSD, cannabis and amphetamines.
